New leasing activity continues to boom as rental prices show stabilization.

The number of new lease signings continued to surge as price trends show signs of month-over-month stabilization, causing more renters to seek longer lease terms. There were 9,491 new leases signed during the month, quadrupling the year-ago total, and the highest amount tracked since at least 2008. Net effective median rent, the face rent less landlord concessions, fell 11.1% to $3,037 from year-ago levels but rose by a record 8.8% from the prior month. With net effective median rent rising month over month for the fifth time in six months, tenants have indicated that they don't perceive a continuation of large price declines by signing longer lease terms over the past several months. With typical lease terms of one and two years, the average term in May was 15.6 months, up from 13.3 months in February. The market share of one-year leases set a record of 77.6% back in December but dropped by half in May to 37.6%. Conversely, the market share of two-year leases was 17.4% last December but more than tripled to a 57.5% share in May. Note: Our research efforts pivoted to a new and more robust listing system this year that enabled us to pull more rental inventory into all three rental markets reported in this series. Listing inventory and the vacancy rate was restated beginning in December 2020.*

Property Type

- For the fifth straight month, non-doorman rental prices fell year over year at a higher rate than doorman rentals
- New development leasing market share was the highest in more than a year

The number of new lease signings surged to new records in three of the past four months as rental price trends showed month over month stability and tenant lease terms expanded. There were 2,506 new leases signed during the month, nearly quadrupling the year-ago total to the highest amount tracked since January 2008. Net effective median rent, the face rent less landlord concessions, fell 9.5% to $2,644 from year-ago levels but increased month over month at the highest rate in more than a decade. Net effective median rent rose month over month for the second time in three months, so tenants have been more willing to sign longer lease terms in recent months. With typical lease terms of one and two years, the average term in May was 15.1 months, up from 13.6 months in February. The market share of one year leases was 70.8% back in December but fell sharply by May to 47.7%. Conversely, the market share of two-year leases was 23.4% last December but more than doubled to a 49.7% share in May.
